

LIST MAMA'S QUICK TIPS

6 Quick Summertime Productivity Tips for Work at Home Parents

by Jennifer Tankersley of ListPlanIt.com

About the Author

Jennifer Tankersley, aka the List Mama, has been making lists since she learned to write.

As the founder and chief list maker at ListPlanIt.com, she has created hundreds of pages in the form of lists, checklists, inventories, worksheets, schedules, timelines, and to dos. All of which are geared toward helping others live a more organized life.

She is not only the creator of ListPlanIt, but also its #1 user! Married and mother to 3, Jennifer resides in Maine, where she runs her online business from home. It's clear to see the need for lists in her life.

Feel Free to Share This Report As-Is With Others!

Pass this report on to friends, family or anyone else you feel would benefit from the information within.

OR (and this is even better)...

Sign up for our affiliate program!

Affiliates receive a copy of this exact report branded with their own affiliate links to pass around. When those who read your report, click on your link and make a purchase from List Plan It, you'll earn a commission on their purchase.

Click here to learn more and signup as an affiliate!

Please note you do NOT have the right to edit this report in any way or claim any type of authorship. You may pass it on as-is or sign up to promote it as an affiliate. Thank you for your cooperation and in making ListPlanIt a useful resource for everyone!

Feel Free to Pass This Report On!

ListPlanIt.com

Lists to Help Put Your World in Order

Your Child's Summer Vacation Doesn't Have to Mean a Drop in Business (or Sanity) for You

For children, summer vacation is the pinnacle of their year. Swimming, playing, sleeping in, and being at home are a few of the things that epitomize childhood summers. For parents who work from home, notions of summer vacation are a little different. Those who operate a service business may need to spend much of the time away from home. In this case, arrangements for your child(ren) must be made. If you write or work independently from home, then you will have to be creative.

Here are some tips to work productively while children are on summer vacation.

❖ Keep a Detailed Calendar and Plan Ahead

You need to know what is happening ahead of time. Keep a calendar and put everything on it that MUST be done (dentist appointments, baseball practice, etc). Each weekend, take a look at the coming week and determine what blocks of time you can devote to work. As much as possible, assign goals to each block: e.g. Monday morning (work) – write blog post, write guest post, spend 15 minutes in social media. You will be more productive during your work times if you are able to work toward achieving certain goals.

❖ Be Realistic about your Schedule

Those who obtain childcare may know exactly the hours that they can work, while those without childcare may have to block out times of their day to fit in work. I suggest to those without childcare that you get to know the quiet times in your home. This may mean that you are up before the sun and well after the sun has gone down. The only way you will be productive is to find quiet blocks of time.

Feel Free to Pass This Report On!

❖ Have an “Office”

You may or may not have an entire room that can be used solely as an office, but either way you should be sure to establish rules and boundaries for your office space. For example, there should be no loud play in the office area.

It is understandable that if you have toddlers, they may need to play around your feet, but you can begin to stress to them that this is where you work and it should be a quiet zone. Encourage behavior and volume-control that is library-appropriate.

❖ Schedule Playdates

If your children are school-aged, then you may be able to arrange a weekly “swap”. Have a friend come play at your house for a morning or an afternoon, and then later in the week your child can play at the friend’s house. I find that even with friends at my house, my children are happy and occupied, and it gives me a chance to get things done.

❖ Find Places to Work and Play

There are many places that you can let children play with minimal supervision. You can bring along your work and try to get bits and pieces done. Take short breaks to play with the kids. Here are a few examples:

1. Your yard. Grab a chair and keep an eye on the kids as they play in the yard or ride their bikes on the sidewalk or blow bubbles.
2. An age-appropriate indoor or outdoor playground. Keep one eye on the kids and the other on your laptop.
3. A pool or beach. Obviously, you need to be confident here that your child(ren) can handle the depth of the water. If you have non-swimmers, then a sprinkler or splash park is the way to go.

Feel Free to Pass This Report On!

Be Flexible

As a parent, you already get plenty of practice with being flexible. As a work-at-home parent, you will definitely be called on to think outside the box. Your work may be done primarily on a computer, but if you are going somewhere without an internet connection and you need to work, then you may need to bring your calendar to get some planning done or a pen and paper to write the old-fashioned way.

Your work may involve supplies for crafting, but if you must squeeze in some work away from your inventory, you may choose to bring your checkbook to write out some bills.

ListPlanIt.com has many tools and resources available for work-at-home parents including those to help with Business Planning, Meal Planning, Home Management, Family Matters, Time Management and more. Come check out all of our lists and start putting your world in order today!

I'd love to hear from you. Come by the blog and comment on this post with your tips & tricks for working from home in the summer while the kiddos are out of school!

See you there,

List Mama

Jennifer Tankersley

ListPlanIt.com

Feel Free to Pass This Report On!

ListPlanIt.com

Lists to Help Put Your World in Order